If you haven't read "Wolfsong" (the first part of the Green Creek stories), then do so. Ravensong starts at a time before Wolfsong began, runs concurrently with the events in Wolfsong for a while, but from the perspective of characters who stepped away from the events in Wolfsong, and then jumps ahead to a point after the events in Wollfsong.

--The women of Green Creek--The official soundtrack for Ravensong--The importance of packpackpack, -- enemies to lovers vs. grumpy assholes to lovers (guess which Gordo and Mark actually are), and why the angst in Ravensong is harder for me than it was in Wolfsong--Why everyone in Green Creek could be gay, and I don't care who hates that Ravensong is a stunning, intense addition to the Green Creek series, and once again, I find myself at a loss for words to adequately express the experience of reading one of these books. Klune's unique singsong voice and lyrical style are hypnotic, calling to something within me like a siren - drawing me into this deceptively simple feeling yet complex story and world.

“Ravensong,” simply stated, is the sequel to “Wolfsong,” focused once again on the Bennett wolfpack in the tiny isolated hill town of Green Creek, Oregon. This time Klune’s micro-epic narrative focuses on Gordo Livingstone, son of the Bennett wolfpack’s witch.

Start by marking “Lovesong (Green Creek #2.5)” as Want to Read: ... Author's Note: This is part of a series meant to be read in order, starting with Wolfsong followed by Ravensong. If you haven't read both books, this will spoil major events. You've been warned. Get A Copy.

She has lived. She has lost. Everything she has is... More

This series is everything to me right now. These characters make my heart ache, as Im terribly attached to each one. Green Creek is the perfect little forested town; being immersed into such a beautiful place with each book is wonderful. Not to mention Heartsong included major character ace rep! Seriously, that makes me the happiest to see.
